Mrs. M. V. Powell Says Danger of Submarine Took Joy Out of Trip.

Mrs. M. V. Powell of Sao Paulo, Brazil, who is in Columbia visiting her mother, Mrs. Henry Price at Read Hall, says that every precaution is being taken by the steamers in the southern waters to guard against submarines. Mrs. Powell sailed from Buenos Aires on the Banbau, an English liner on its way to Liverpool with a cargo of meat. All of the passengers were landed at New York City, where the ship was armed for its trip to England. It carried no passengers to Liverpool.

"The danger of submarines took much of the pleasure from the trip," said Mrs. Powell. "The lights of the ship were turned on at only half power and were screened with canvas. A hood of black paper threw the rays downward instead of outward where they might be seen on the water. The usual dances were not held on the deck but back in an enclosed part of the ship, where the music could not be heard."

"We were called in by wireless at Bermuda. English officers came aboard and the report was circulated that a German spy was on the ship. A woman of German descent was accused of carrying German papers and she and her possessions were thoroughly searched but the papers were not found. The woman was innocent but she had taken some letters from German friends at Bermuda to Buenos Aires to mail. These caused the trouble. The delay at Bermuda cost the steamship company $2,000."

Mrs. Powell said she feared serious trouble in Brazil with the pro-Germans but the country was well prepared for war, having an army of approximately 550,000 trained men. Her husband, M. V. Powell, C. E. '10, is now representative of New York and Boston companies with engineering supplies in Brazil.

Ninety Student Visitors Get in Columbia Jail at Once.

"They never will all get in dat place," exclaimed an old negro woman this morning, as she gathered her shawl about her shoulders and watched a class of ninety students file into the city jail. She saw the last one enter the building and went on her way satisfied.

The visitors at the jail were members of Dr. L. L. Bernard's class in criminology. A study in penology is being made, and conditions in the county and city jails were taken up at the class hour this morning. Last Saturday the class visited the state penitentiary at Jefferson City.
